

Abstract of the Disclosure

Provided is a phase-change element capable of operating with low power consumptions and a method of manufacturing the same. The phase-change element comprises a first electrode used as a heating layer, a second electrode, which is disposed opposite to the first electrode, and a memory layer made of a phase-change material located contacts the side surfaces of the first electrode and the second electrode.